

Urszula Grzybowska, Marek Karwański

Application of Data Envelopment Analysis to calculating probability of default for high rated portfolio

The paper presents a new approach to calculation the probability of default in case of Low Default Portfolio (LDP). The method is based on application of DEA and statistical ordering methods. The proposed model allows to build rating classes and enables to select the portfolio with very low default probability. The results were applied to companies traded on Warsaw Stock Exchange.